Dr. Reginald Roberson serves as an Instructional Systems Specialist, and Chief of Professional Continuing Education, for the Air Force Negotiation Center (AFNC). Dr. Roberson designs, develops, implements, and manages training programs for negotiation and mediation related curricula. He also manages and administers Instructional System Design (ISD) programs to include adaptive conflict management, negotiation, and mediation skills as a core leadership competency for all Airmen (officer, enlisted, civilian), and the development of negotiations as a corporate capability for the Air Force. He also conducts research, analyzes, and synthesizes information received from outside subject matter experts to develop executive and institution-level briefings and training products.

Dr. Roberson's passion for education and training began in 2006, as he began a profession in higher education. Throughout his career, he has held various academic positions across the field, acquiring an array of knowledge and experiences at the university and the two-year community college levels. His career path includes leadership experiences in college academics, student affairs, adult education, and student retention. He began his career as an academic advisor, providing academic guidance for students pursuing undergraduate and graduate-level degree programs at Troy University. In this role, he provided individualized guidance to thousands of traditional and non-traditional learners; ensuring students understood academic program requirements, university policies, and had full access to all available resources and support services. After serving in this capacity, Dr. Roberson was selected to serve as an undergraduate adjunct professor; focusing his attention on effectively designing and sustaining student-centered curricula learning environments for residential and distance learning programs.

Transitioning from the field of higher education, Dr. Roberson began a new trajectory in adult education and training, becoming an educational guidance counselor for the Department of the Army's Continuing Education System. In this role, Dr. Roberson worked across multiple Army installations providing programmatic guidance for service members and military families. Prior to joining AFNC, Dr. Roberson also served as an Instructional Systems Specialist for the Department of the Army, Cyber Center of Excellence (CCoE). In this capacity, he served as an instructional facilitator and course manager for a range of professional military education courses offered through the CCoE's Faculty and Staff Development Center. Dr. Roberson worked collaboratively across the Army's Training and Doctrine Command (TRADOC) in evaluating military educational programs, and providing recommendations for improving academic and training curricula.

In 2020, Dr. Roberson was awarded the Civilian Service Achievement Medal by The Secretary of the Army for his demonstrated leadership abilities, technical expertise, and outstanding performance in supporting the United States Training and Doctrine Command, and the Cyber Center of Excellence in the successful accomplishment of its overall mission.
